

```
cd /usr/share/logs/chats/274364
```

```
cat minister.log
```

[20:41] Chancellor:

It's done. The government is now owned by Pharmalyte. The final papers were signed an hour ago.

[20:42] Minister:

Hard to believe. Our whole country is now basically a puppet of a company.

Strange... but also kind of impressive.

[20:43] Chancellor:

Impressive and easy. No more voting, no more long meetings. Pharmalyte sends orders, we follow. Everything gets done fast.

[20:44] Minister:

True. Their "decision Team," as they call themselves, already sent a script for tomorrow's speech.

They even rewrote half our laws in under a day.

Honestly... it's scary how good they are at taking control. Where did they learn that?

[20:47] Chancellor:

I don't know, but the public doesn't need slow government. They need results. Pharmalyte gives results.

Plus, the payout we got for signing away control... incredible.

[20:49] Minister:

Did you read the new rules?

If we don't obey, they can force us into "re-training."

Feels like they want to control our minds.

[20:51] Chancellor:

Maybe. But look at how well their new "Puppets" in the ministries are working, no arguing, no mistakes.

The country is running smoother than ever.

[20:55] Chancellor:

And people won't notice. Pharmalyte controls the news, and basically everything in the country...

[20:56] Minister:

I still feel guilty. We sold the whole country like it was a product.

[20:57] Chancellor:

We sold something broken and got stability instead.

[20:58] Minister:

If anyone ever sees these chat logs, we're in trouble.

[20:59] Chancellor:

Relax. Pharmalyte owns all communication networks.

Nothing leaks without their approval.